From: Doug Shipman, CEO- National Center for Civil and Human Rights

Re: Responses to questions asked during presentation on April 26, 2011

Q1: How will the Center include labor and training of workers in the process of building the Center?

The Center will secure a Construction Management (CM) firm in the next few weeks. As part of the RFP process we highlighted a strong desire to use Organized Labor in the construction of the Center. We have also had preliminary discussions with programs that offer trade-skill training to individuals. We plan to kickoff a process to review and use Organized Labor in the project following the signing of the CM contract.

Q2: What are the efforts to help Auburn Avenue area receive resources and investments as part of the Center's efforts?

We are currently undertaking several initiatives.

- We still fund and support the Andrew Young Auburn Avenue Walking Tour that can be downloaded or accessed via cell phone for visiting Auburn Avenue.
- We have provided advice and guidance to the Auburn Avenue Research Library regarding their new expansion project.
- We are working with the Streetcar planning team to integrate history both on and off of the streetcars and to plan the stops and routes to support residents and visitors interacting with key assets throughout the Auburn Avenue area.
- We have been part of an effort to secure funding for streetscape improvements that will include visitation information and walking trail support.

Q3: How is the Center engaging Civil and Human Rights leaders?

We have a formal group called the Global Advisory Board that includes many civil and human rights leaders. We engaged this on a regular basis for advice and assistance. We also have relationships with key individuals civil and human rights leaders of organizations that we have consistently brought together to review materials, provide advice and help us establish partnerships. We continue to expand our formal and informal ways of engaging leaders in the work to build and program the Center.
